

A springboard for your European ambitions and an accelerator for your career

The Executive Course in European Studies from France's Ecole Nationale d'Administration (ENA) addresses the paramount issues of our time from a European perspective: migration, consequences of climate change and the energy transition, development of digital technologies, economic growth and sustainable development, social cohesion, the fight against terrorism and more. The course fosters mobility, promoting career advancement and contributing to the Europeification of professional profiles. It will help you forge direct, valuable links with European decision-makers, gain insight into the workings of the European Union and develop a powerful Europe-wide professional network. Today, this network comprises nearly 600 senior executives and high-level players from all major sectors.

Training in the heart of Europe

- A high-level training course compatible with the exercise of your professional responsibilities
- A programme made up of 10 modules over a period of 10 months (two to five days per month)
- Travel in several Member States and one study tour
- Two modules closely linked to European institutions in Strasbourg and Brussels

This programme comprises a general foundation complemented by insight into current European issues. The teaching content and methods are centred on concrete experience, giving participants the opportunity to meet with high-level actors in the field of European affairs. The CHEE features a strong focus on case studies and simulations of European negotiations.

“ The CHEE gave me a practical immersion into European issues within a group of French and European figures featuring extremely diverse profiles, all involved in European matters and eager to know more about Europe. The teaching is grounded in dialogue and experience. This network has already proved effective in my work with a European-regulated industry in which strategy is developed at the European level.
